SUMMARY

The profound and long economic crisis we are experiencing has forced many entrepreneurs to adopt drastic decisions in order to keep their business afloat, such as refinancing debt, borrowing from their family, reducing headcount or even filing a petition for bankruptcy. A majority of companies and entrepreneurs resort to these measures once it is too late and without adopting realistic financial planning, which in the end only worsens the situation of insolvency and in some cases it exposes the company director to the risk of being sentenced to pay the company debts with his/her own property. How to react to this insolvency situation? The aim of this seminar is helping entrepreneurs to take the right decision, explaining the risks taken on by the company director in light of this insolvency situation as well as legal measures that may be adopted to prevent or lessen this risk such as declaring bankrupt or going through a redundancy dismissal procedure.
